Introduction

On 17th July 2025, the IT Department of Parul Polytechnic Institute (PPI), in collaboration with the Parul Innovation and Entrepreneurship Research Centre (PIERC), hosted an enlightening session titled “Lean Start-Up & Minimum Viable IT Product/Business.” The session was held in Room 201, PPI, and led by Mr. Vivek Deepak Joshi—an Assistant Professor and Innovation Ambassador affiliated with the Ministry of Education's Innovation Cell. This initiative was part of Parul University's ongoing efforts to strengthen entrepreneurial mindset and innovation among students in the field of IT.

Objectives of the Session

- To introduce the key principles and methodology behind the Lean Start-Up approach.

- To explore the significance of a Minimum Viable Product (MVP) in developing IT businesses.
- To equip participants with practical strategies for applying lean methodologies to tech-based ventures.
- To promote innovation-driven thinking among budding IT professionals and aspiring entrepreneurs.

Learning Outcomes

- Participants gained a comprehensive understanding of how lean start-up principles streamline business development.
- They learned to conceptualize, validate, and refine MVPs tailored to the tech industry.
- The session enhanced awareness of optimizing resources while minimizing risks and waste in product development.
- Attendees left better prepared to turn innovative ideas into viable, scalable IT solutions using lean techniques.

Conclusion

The session proved to be a valuable learning experience for both students and faculty, reinforcing the role of lean methodologies in modern IT entrepreneurship. With expert insights from Mr. Joshi and the enthusiastic support of coordinators from PIERC and PPI, participants are now equipped to innovate with greater precision, agility, and confidence. Events like these continue to foster a culture of experimentation and impact-driven development at Parul University.
